A Secular Hymn

We celebrate the living
Of one we held so dear,
And let her go with gladness
And free of any fear.
As Spring will follow Winter
And night will follow day
So, like a mighty river,
Time bears us all away.

We weep to know we're parting
And will not meet again,
But ease our grief together
Which helps us bear the pain.
To every human being
Death comes and brings an end:
Here may we learn acceptance
And greet her as a friend.

We number then those virtues
That we today recall:
The laughter, love and kindness
That have enriched us all;
And pledge ourselves together
In honouring her years,
To live our lives more fully,
Rejoicing through our tears.
